New Campus Dining Options

After thorough reflection and planning, the university has decided to introduce new dining options for all students who eat on campus starting next semester. All dining facilities will offer a greater range of cuisines to satisfy all dietary preferences and requirements. This change aims to cater to a growing demand for diverse and nutritious food options among students, especially those seeking vegetarian, vegan, or gluten-free meals. Additionally, it aligns with the university's commitment to promoting sustainable and environmentally friendly practices by including more plant-based and locally sourced food items available in dining facilities across campus for students.

Conversation

Woman: Have you seen the announcement about the new dining options coming?

Man: Yeah, and I think it's fantastic.

Woman: Really, but I don't think it applies to you. Does it?

Man: Maybe not me particularly but just the other day, I noticed Sarah, the student we studied with last semester, brings her own meals to campus. When I asked her why, she told me it was because she was a vegan. I remember when we ate together she did always have a salad, but I didn't realize why. She stopped eating on campus because the options were so limited.

Woman: So, you think it will help her?

Man: And a lot of other students too. Next semester, I'm sure she'll be excited to try what they offer. Also, I've thought about going vegetarian myself. I'm confident I'm not alone.

Woman: Do you think it'll really promote sustainability though?

Man: That's another reason why I support it. My friend Tom, he's an environmental science major. And he's really excited about the introduction of locally sourced produce. He told me that he learned in class about food miles, the amount of distance food travels to get to its final destination, usually by trucks. By doing this, the university will significantly reduce the food miles of most food on campus and so reduce our carbon footprint.

Question

The man discusses his views on the new dining options introduced by the university. State his opinion and explain the reasons he gives for holding that opinion.

Can I say his friend Tom taught him that local food sources will reduce the carbon footprint, making the university more environmentally friendly.
